So perhaps evolution has a more fundamental progressive bent through us but this is very recent on an evolutionary scale while that is not at all how we got here. In short the only reason evolution appears to be progressive is due to death and cellular degradation, without these facts of life evolution would probably randomly go in any and all directions.

Progressive evolution assumes that we are progressing towards something. This is not the case. Evolution just happens, it's not attempting to "progress" anywhere as these differences between organisms just happen and thusly you cannot say that one organism is "more evolved" than another nor can you say that this organism showed more "evolutionary progress" over another as changes are random.
